V. Issues, Problems, and Recommendations

Problems with data collection by the on-site project staff seemed to be challenging most especially on the target variables of the study. Assessing and quantifying the impacts, so as laying out the outcome indicators has been a major factor that makes the analysis somehow challenging due to the overlapping interventions of the various government agencies present in the partner community PO's. Estimating the project impacts have been more tedious and difficult, especially on the delineation of the stakeholders' overlapping interventions, activities, and assistance provided to the involved community Pos. Further, high workload of the study leader significantly hinders the progress of the study.
