PAPER PRESENTATION

GITANGKIS- GIBUWOS- GIHABI: Ecology, History, and Creative Forms of the Saguran- Raffia of Bohol

KAAGI: Tracing Visayan Identities in Cultural Texts

6th Annual Philippine Studies Conference

School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS)

University of London, United Kingdom

June 25, 2021

This study seeks to answer how the Buri Palm relates to the weaving tradition in Bohol and how the woven textile mediates the weavers to the palm and their botanical environment. To answer these questions from the ecological, historical, and aesthetic perspectives, the paper positions the weaving practice in its historical and ethnobotanical perspectives by carefully analyzing its possible beginnings and examining the Buri palm through the traditional knowledge of the local culture and of the people. The aesthetics of the practice are evaluated through the existing weaving implements, the primary materials, the fiber, dyes, and design techniques utilized. Further, the study uses three major research strategies. The analysis shows that the Buri palm plays a significant role in the lives of the Boholanos especially during the Bohol Revolution against the Spanish regime. The woven Saguran served as the utilitarian article of clothing used by the Boholano Revolutionaries. Moreover, the palm and the multitude of sources -- food, clothing, and medicine -- it offers to the people makes it an esteemed and revered palm. The woven Saguran mediates the weavers and the palm in ways that the weavers express their creativity in weaving various patterns and designs inspired by their natural environment.

The paper was presented in the Bisayan Weaving Cultures together with Prof. Mitzi Marie Aguilar-Reyes and Chiara Fernandez under the plenary speaker Dr. Stephanie Coe.

INTERESTS

Christian is an art studies scholar whose field of interest is centered on Philippine traditional and contemporary arts. His research and documentation projects on textiles of the Philippine regions have given him a wider and more critical perspective in dealing with and handling the art form. He also worked with one of the Philippines' leading textile scholars, Filipino contemporary visual artists, and fashion designers. As a fashion design enthusiast, he also incorporates local textiles in modern and classic silhouettes and sustainable eco-friendly pieces garments. Aside from the art scene, he enjoys community outreach programs and environmental projects. He finds great joy with children and teens while giving them art workshops and storytelling sessions. One of his goals is to teach Philippine Art to young Filipinos for them to understand our roots and identity.
